

We made eye contact for three seconds outside Boots on Tottenham Court Road while I waited for my dexamethasone prescription which was delayed because the pharmacist had to verify the 8mg dosage
which she said
was high for someone
my age
and you
were buying
meal
deal

sandwich

crisps

Fanta

and

for

those

three

seconds

everything

that would

never

happen

between us

happened—

the flat in Hackney

the argument about whose turn to take the bins out

the way you'd eventually

pronounce dexamethasone

correctly

and then

you

looked

down

at

your

phone

and the pharmacist called my name and I collected pills that will dissolve the person who just met you
